DISCOVERING SELF AND OTHERS

Improving communication and collaboration with people who work together

Whether you realise it or not, your behaviour fits predictable patterns. The way you respond to your environment, the way you react to people, what your view of the world is, and what the energy you bring to work each day is usually follow patterns that become obvious when you know what to look for.

At the heart of this program is the cutting-edge DISC Profile Assessment, a powerful tool for people to understand themselves. With the unique Self Assessment and Observer Assessment, it provides a comprehensive view of how individuals interact in everyday situations. The observer feedback section uses data from up to 25 others and is displayed through graphs to demonstrate trends from various settings (work, family, and social). No other assessment on the market provides this level of feedback or enables more in-depth interpretation and validation of one's DISCposition. The goal is to understand behaviour in order to enhance work relationships.

In the DISCovering Self portion of the program, you learn to observe yourself objectively. You receive the tools and insight necessary for self-observation, and a model to help you make sense of what you learn. In the second part of the program, you will learn to apply these tools and insights to DISCovering Others—not in an attempt to label, but to understand, appreciate, and better respond to people.

PROGRAM FORMAT

DIScovering Self and Others is a one-day classroom experience. The design can be modified by combining and rearranging the learning activities for the client, and then delivering the program modules over time or on consecutive days. This flexible delivery option allows for different training approaches to meet the needs of different parts of the organisation while ensuring consistency in the quality and content of the training curriculum.

Part One—DIScovering Self—3.5 Hours

The goal in the initial part of the program is to teach individuals how to observe their own behaviour and determine whether it is serving them and their goals. DIScovering Self is a vital step in preparing for self-leadership and the leadership of others. Imagine for a moment that you are a leader who has a high need to control your environment—and the people in it. Because it feels so natural, you may not recognise when your controlling behaviour shuts others down or prevents them from developing needed skills and confidence. When the situation calls for you to match or meet the needs of another, you will find it difficult to make the adjustments necessary. It is difficult to adapt new behaviour if you are unaware of your instinctive responses and the ways that you automatically act.

Part Two—DIScovering Others—3.5 Hours to 4.5 Hours

The focus of the second part of the program is on identifying people-reading clues that provide insight into the most appropriate way to communicate with others. Emphasis is placed on the most important DISC principle, the Platinum Rule: Do unto others as they would want done to them. Part Two builds on the understanding gained in Part One and provides interactive opportunities to practice what has been learned, including a dress rehearsal for a meeting with someone at work. People in leadership roles should focus on using DISC concepts to develop their direct reports and staff members. Other participants may benefit from the ability to influence up and to communicate effectively with clients, volunteers, family members, and peers.
