

Essential Motivators™

Boost Collaboration by Better Understanding Yourself and Others

Improve Critical Interpersonal Dynamics

Interpersonal dynamics are more important now than ever. Friction and misunderstandings in work relationships constantly drain efficiency and cause frustration and problems. When individuals have a better understanding of themselves, they can bring their best skills and talents to their work. And when people understand and appreciate the strengths and needs of their coworkers, their relationships flourish, their workgroups become true teams, and their collective potential is unleashed.

Several other popular personality and temperament systems are in use, but these systems tend to be too complex for most people to apply in their moments of need. Essential Motivators teaches a four-pattern framework that is powerfully simple, effective, and fun to apply, and allows all employees to reap its benefits.

The Essential Motivators framework was developed by author and expert Linda Berens, who has over forty years of experience in teaching people to recognise their strengths, transcend their weaknesses, and work together better.

A Way to Understand People's Strengths and Needs

Blanchard uses a process of self-discovery in which learners have an opportunity to reflect on their true selves. Essential Motivators teaches an easy-to-apply system of four patterns that helps people become more collaborative and effective:

-  Air—Strategic, theoretical, and focused on designing solutions. They want to be competent and achieve mastery.
-  Earth—Hungry for responsibility, accountability, and predictability. They want to be involved and have a place to contribute.
-  Fire—Want the freedom to choose the next action and respond to the needs of the moment. They seek solutions to have an impact and get results.
-  Water—Want to be authentic and caring and develop meaningful relationships. They seek to develop potential and foster growth.
